

The Nashville Technology Council award for Company of the Year goes to

Franklin-based LeanKit can add another laurel to its big year, which already included a multimillion-dollar investment and a new office across the pond: the Company of the Year award from the Nashville Technology Council.

“The NTC Awards shine a light on leaders for the work they’ve done in the tech community,” Bryan Huddleston, president and CEO of the Nashville Technology Council, said in a news release. “Whether they’re a volunteer, teacher, developer, an innovative company or team, or a member of the C-suite, we recognize them for not just building the next great innovative product and service, but for their role in making Nashville a prosperous community for business, for technology professionals, and for our families.”

Here’s the full list of winners:

Company of the Year: LeanKit

CIO of the Year: Barry Vandevier, Asurion

CISO of the Year: Scott Mackelprang, Asurion

CTO of the Year: Haden McWhorter, Premise Health

Team of the Year: HPA - Trizetto

Volunteer of the Year: Meg Chamblee, CTS

Technology Educator of the Year: Stacey Kizer, Williamson County Schools

Technology Student of the Year: Steven Bell, Belmont University

Innovator of the Year: Dan Hogan, Medalogix

Data Scientist of the Year: Damian Mingle, WPC Healthcare

Software Developer/Architect of the Year: Alan Scott, HCA Healthcare

Marketing Innovator of the Year: John Farkas, Golden Spiral Marketing

Early Stage Company of the Year: Medalogix

